STAT

Area of Coverage: China - North, Northwest, and South China

Subjects Covered: Economic and financial review of 1951; industrial, financial, and agricultural developments. Charts and tables.

Scholarship Evaluation: Competent and scholarly review of the general economic situation of China during 1951 by pro-Communist authors.

Review: The twenty-four articles cover the economic situation in Communist China in 1951. They review the achievements in agricultural and industrial production, the readjustment of the economic structure and industry, the revival of production, the interflow of native products, and foreign trade for the country in general; and for North, South, and Northwest China, the provinces of Kuangtung and Fukien, and the cities of Canton, Foochow, Shanghai, and Chungking in particular. Certain special reports for the regions, provinces, and cities seem to be worth careful study because of their comprehensive treatment of industrial, commercial, financial, and foreign trade developments.

Special articles deal with insurance, the effect of the US embargo on foreign exchange rates, the native products exhibits, and the drive to increase production and economy in state trading companies. Other sections of the yearbook review economic developments in Hong Kong, Malaya, the Soviet Union, and the "capitalist" countries.
